

Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors
By Shauna Krause, President, Capitol Services, Inc.

It's true, we go away for a holiday or vacation and lose our memories! Another contractor gets help in determining the scope of his General, and an Attorney gets a pat on the back for making his case...

Q: We spoke a couple of weeks ago and since then, not only has time passed, but I went on vacation for the Fourth of July holiday and now of course many of the details of our conversation have left my head. From the notes I took, I have down that we have a Responsible Managing Employee (RME) on our current license. In the same notes I have down that we have another individual as our Responsible Managing Officer (RMO). I have yet another note that states a company cannot have an RMO and an RME at the same time. Can you help me decipher/clarify my notes please?

A: I looked up your license again and yes, you have one individual who is an RME for the "B" General Building classification. You have a different individual who is listed as your RMO, and he qualifies the "C-10" Electrical classification on the license.

In an attempt, to decipher your notes, a license is permitted to have multiple Qualifiers (RME's/RMO's) as long as the license holds more than one classification. If a company only holds one classification, it would not be possible for the company to have an RME and an RMO at the same time on the same license.

OR, it's possible your notes were referring to the fact that an individual cannot be an RMO on one Active license, and at the same time be an RME on a separate Active Contractor's License (unless under very few/special circumstances).

Q: I am a licensed contractor and I have both the "A" General Engineering and the "C-61"/"D-06" Concrete Related Services classifications on my license. I wanted to bid on a job for repairing a bus stop which was knocked down by a vehicle. The project would include installing the benches, bolting them into the concrete as well as constructing and installing the enclosure/shelter at the bus stop. Can I do this project with my current license?

A: An "A" Contractors license would not be appropriate for the work you described. You would need to hold the "B" General Building classification or the "D-34" Prefabricated Equipment classification.

Q: I am an Attorney helping one of my Contractor clients with a couple of transactions and we believe we need to enlist your assistance, and definitely your advice. The individual client is 100% owner of Corporation A. He is the RMO and has a specialty license. He has purchased two other corporations doing the same type of work as Corporation A, but in slightly different geographical areas. The two purchased corporations (Corp B and C) are intended to be wholly owned by the Qualifier. Corps B and C have existing specialty licenses with the CSLB holding the same classification as Corp. A.

The client wants to own, operate, and act as the RMO for Corps. B and C, replacing the sellers/retiring owners. He would like to use the same business names due to the business good will of each.

It appears to me that the client would not violate B&P Code Section 7068.1 because he would be the 100% owner of all three corporations and he would not have to be a "bona fide employee" of all three under 7068 since he would not be the RME, but rather the RMO of each. Am I correct in my interpretation?

A: You are correct. If you're an Attorney with a contractor concern I will have no 'objection' in assisting you!

INTRODUCTION

Aerial lifts have recently replaced ladders and scaffolds because of their flexibility and mobility capabilities. They can be made from metal, fiberglass-reinforced plastic, or other materials and are powered or manually operated. Guidelines have been instituted with the intent to maintain a safe work environment for all employees.

TYPES OF AERIAL LIFTS

Aerial lifts are primarily used for temporary, flexible access purposes such as maintenance, construction or for emergency use by firefighters. An aerial lift can be defined as any vehicle-mounted device used to elevate personnel, including:

- Extendable boom platforms
- Aerial ladders
- Articulating (jointed) boom platforms
- Vertical towers

HAZARDS

Aerial lifts should only be operated by qualified and experienced employees. Unsafe practices and negligent behavior can cause the following hazards:

- Fall from elevated level
- Objects falling from lifts
- Tip-overs
- Ejections from the lift platform
- Structural failures (collapses)
- Electric shock
- Entanglement hazards
- Contact with objects
- Contact with ceilings and other overhead objects

AERIAL LIFT EQUIPMENT

SAFE WORK PRACTICES

Safe work practices are used to prevent accidents that could lead to health hazards for employees. These practices should be followed by all personnel working in or around any aerial lift equipment.

- The aerial lift and any equipment involved should always be inspected before each use.
- The brake systems should be in working order.
- Hydraulic systems should have automatic apertures installed.
- Platform and lower controls should be guarded.
- Visual daily inspections are recommended.
- The basket should be in the low position before moving the equipment.
- Never rest the basket on a fixed object.
- Maintain a safe distance from high voltage lines.
- Always stand firmly on the floor of the basket.
- Lift controls should be tested each day prior to use.
- A body belt should be worn and a lanyard attached to the boom or basket when working from an aerial lift.
- The insulated portion of an aerial lift should not be altered in any manner that might reduce its insulating value.
- The aerial lift and any equipment involved should always be inspected before each use.

CONCLUSION

Aerial lifts are valuable tools in providing temporary access for people or equipment to inaccessible areas. By following safe work practices within this safety lesson, employees have the power to contribute to the company's overall safety.
