

Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors
By Shauna Krause, President, Capitol Services, Inc.

Lots of military people returning from overseas will be looking for new opportunity and your time in service counts when you apply it to a contractor license application. Can your license be less than 'active' but not expired? Sometimes you might believe there is no question, and that's exactly when you need to ask more...

Q: I was reading the requirements for a Contractor's License in California and I noticed the CSLB accepts military experience and also expedites military personnel applications. How would I go about applying as such? Just curious if it's the same application or if there is a different process for former military members?

A: It is the same application. There is a question on the application asking whether you are currently, or have previously, served in the military. If you mark "Yes" and provide your DD-214 showing you were honorably discharged, then they will expedite the application. As far as military experience, they will accept it as long as it is construction related and within the trade classification you are applying to obtain. To our U.S. Armed Forces personnel, thank you for your service!

Q: My company recently approached me about becoming their Responsible Managing Employee (RME) or Responsible Managing Officer (RMO). I have my own license and they informed of the requirement to Inactivate my personal license, which I'm fine with. Is there somewhere in the CSLB's publications which outlines my liability based on whether I'm an RME or an RMO? Do you recommend one over the other? Is it possible to request from my employer a release of any potential liability that could possibly come about? I absolutely do not want to run into a situation where the Company license and my association with it negatively affects my personal license.

A: There is no CSLB publication specifically detailing liability of RME's/RMO's. And I cannot recommend one over the other, that is something you will need to weigh out on your own. As far as requesting a 'Release of Liability' from your Employer, you can certainly request it, but I'm not sure if such an agreement would be legally binding, as in general, an RMO or RME is responsible for work performed. Therefore, there is always potential for some risk and possibility of impacting your personal license. All of that said, I highly suggest you first consult with an attorney to assess the legal issues that could arise before making your decision. It's always good to be cautious and ask more questions!

Q: I read in one of your Q&A articles if a license is expired for more than five years, the Contractor is required to re-take the exams. My license was "Inactive" for four years, and then I didn't pay to renew it, so now it's been over five years since it's been Active. Assuming I will need to re-take the exams now and request a reactivation or renewal, correct?

A: Once a Qualifier has not been on a "current" license for over five years is when re-testing is required. "Inactive" licenses are considered still current so technically your license has not been current/expired for a little over a year. Therefore, you do not need to re-test, but you will need to submit a renewal and pay the delinquent fee along with either the Inactive fee or Active fee.

ICF ROUNDTABLE AND SITE TOUR EVENT

October 19 & 20 Paradise, CA

BUILD WITH STRENGTH

Discover Techniques to Build Resilient and Fire Safe Housing.
Followed by Site Tour of ICF Multifamily & Single Family Housing

Event Description

Join Build with Strength, ICFMA and Valley Contractors Exchange for an Insulated Concrete Form round table and site tour event in Paradise, CA. This event will explore the latest innovations in Insulated Concrete Form (ICF) construction that are helping contractors and developers build it right the first time. From improved energy-efficiency to increased resilience and fire safety, single family & multifamily projects across the country are seeing the benefits of building with ICFs. Attendees will have the opportunity to hear from industry experts and tour a local multifamily project where this innovative approach to ICF construction is being used to save time and money on the job site. ICFs continue to be the building material of choice due to their cost effectiveness, energy efficiency, and quiet.

Who Should Attend:

Contractors, designers, owners and developers interested in learning about the benefits of building with Insulated Concrete Forms (ICFs) and concrete.

To RSVP, contact Patrick Matsche at pmatsche@nrmca.org (415) 672-9275 or Brandon Wray at bwray@nrmca.org (408) 806-0453 or Carrie Moore at Carrie@vceonline.com (530) 343-1981.

INTRODUCTION

Every year, wildfires are a prevalent threat in the United States. Some of these are started from natural occurrences such as lightning while others are human caused. These fires can destroy property and kill both humans and animals alike. In this lesson we'll discuss the fire triangle, the common causes of wildfire, tips to help minimize wildfires, and the consequences you may face if you start a wildfire.

FIRE TRIANGLE

Knowing the elements it takes to make fires can be helpful in preventing them. Fire consists of three things, oxygen, heat, and fuel; when properly mixed, this creates a chemical reaction that results in flames. As a visual representation of the essential building blocks of fire, see the fire triangle or fire tetrahedron.

The first piece of the triangle is heat. Heat is the source responsible for the initial ignition of other components of a fire. As it is needed to maintain the fire and allow it to spread. Fire spreads from heat removing the moisture of nearby fuel sources, warming the surrounding air, and acting as a preheating mechanism to the fuel in the fire's path.

The second part of the triangle is fuel. Fuel is categorized as any combustible material, which is further categorized by its moisture content, size, shape, quantity, and arrangement in the surrounding landscape. Moisture content is how wet the fuel is and determines how easily a fuel will burn.

The final component, oxygen, is normally comprised of the ambient air of the surrounding landscape. Similar to heat, a fire needs oxygen to start and continue.

If one of these components is removed, a fire cannot start or sustain itself.

COMMON CAUSES OF WILDFIRES

Whether it is started by human interaction or from natural causes, a wildfire's effects are equally destructive. Fires that occur naturally can depend on the location and landscape. For instance, a natural fire may be started by:

- Lightning striking in areas with dry vegetation;
- Areas with volcanic activity;
- Meteors falling to earth;
- Coal seam fires; and
- Spontaneous combustion of dry vegetation.

In contrast, human caused fires can occur in a number of ways including:

- Campfires that have been left unattended, built up in such a way that embers escape the fire pit, or fires that have not been fully extinguished;
- Improper discarding of cigarettes, cigars, and pipe remains;
- People playing with matches or lighters;
- Landscape debris burning;
- Vehicles being parked or used in areas with dry vegetation;
- Chains of towed vehicles creating sparks;
- Fireworks;
- Downed powerlines;
- Arson;
- Target shooting; and
- Prescribed fires, otherwise known as controlled burns.

These are sometimes broken into different categories by government agencies such as:

- Smoking;
- Recreation;
- Equipment; and
- Miscellaneous.

When compared to natural fires, fires caused by humans, on average, account for between 88-90% of the wildfires seen every year in the United States.

TIPS TO HELP MINIMIZE WILDFIRES

Whenever you are dealing with a destructive force like fire, it is in everyone's best interest to treat it with the respect it requires. Preventing wildfires isn't always possible, but if you do your part to learn the prevention methods, you can greatly reduce the risk of accident, injuries, or damage to person or property.

Home Care Prevention

When taking care of your home, especially if you live near woods or open fields, you can prevent wildfire by doing the following:

- Take care of lawn maintenance, such as mowing and trimming, during early morning or evening hours to avoid the hottest part of the day such as before 10 AM.
- Avoid mowing or trimming during windy or hot days.
- When mowing and trimming, keep an eye out for rocks or other items that may spark if contact with metal blades is made.
- Inspect all portable gasoline-powered equipment to verify that it has a spark arrestor.
- When it is feasible, keep your lawn hydrated and maintained.
- Remove lawn debris and cuttings after your lawn care activities have been completed.
- Create a defensible space around your property by removing dead vegetation and other items from under your deck, porch, and within 10 feet or more of your house or property line.

- Do NOT burn lawn debris and trimmings on days that have burn bans, on windy days, or when the weather is hot and dry.

Vehicles

As you leave your property, it is important to be mindful when you drive down the road or use off-road vehicles. You can assure yourself you are being safe as long as you:

- Inspect the length of your tow chain for trailers and other items that need towing. You will want to wrap or set the chain in such a way that will prevent it from dragging while on the road. Chains that do drag on the road have the potential to cause sparks that could set dry brush and vegetation on fire.
- Before riding on the trail, inspect your ATV to verify that the spark arrestor is in place. If the spark arrestor has been removed for any reason, make sure that it has been replaced prior to starting the vehicle.
- Check your tire pressure to make sure it is in the range recommended by the manufacturer. Low-pressured tires could cause the rim of the tire to make contact with gravel and rocks, which could cause a spark that could ignite surrounding dry vegetation. If tires are low, refill them as needed.
- Avoid riding or parking in areas that have dry vegetation as heat from the exhaust system or engine could ignite a wildfire.
- It is recommended or required, depending on local or state law, that you travel with a small fire extinguisher, a collapsible pail, and shovel to help your put out a small fire should one occur.
- If you have driven through long grass, take a moment to pull over and turn off your vehicle to remove any built-up debris from around your exhaust, muffler, engine, under the seat, and wheel wells.

Target Shooters

Just as some people may enjoy off-roading activities, there are some people who enjoy going out to the range for some target practice. However, during dry conditions, target shooting can cause wildfires if done improperly. In order to prevent wildfires during target shooting you should:

- Check your area to verify that a ban has not been put into effect. If a ban has been put into place, do NOT go target shooting.
- Make sure to place your target in an appropriate area. Areas should either be on dirt or gravel and be free of dry vegetation. The reason for this is bullet fragments that strike the target can be extremely hot and easily start a fire if it falls into an area with dry brush and other vegetation.
- Select targets that are made of paper or clay for days that may be hot or dry as steel targets or rocks may throw sparks.
- Use lead core bullets instead of steel core and solid copper. Steel core and solid copper bullets have the highest potential to start a fire due to how easily they can cause sparks when striking objects.
- Additionally, do NOT use incendiary or tracer ammunition in flammable areas.
- Do NOT use exploding targets on hot, dry, windy days.
- Keep a fire extinguisher, shovel, and some extra water on hand in case a fire does start.

- If a fire does start, report it to your local fire department or 911. When speaking with dispatch, let them know the location of the fire, the type of fuel burning, the speed that the fire is spreading, the height of the flames, and any buildings or other structures that are in the path of the fire. Follow all instructions given to you by dispatch.

Campfires

If you are planning on making smores, enjoying some warmth, or making some tasty food, remember that a campfire can easily start a wildfire. To prevent campfires from becoming wildfires, be sure to:

- Check your local area fire restrictions. If your area has restrictions on campfires, please follow them.
- Make sure to get any required permits. As they may be required by local fire agencies, the U.S. Forest Service, or Bureau of Land Management (BLM).
- Select an area that is away from brush, logs, or decaying vegetation. It is recommended that any area you select away from these areas be cleared of grass, leaves, or vegetation such as pine needles.
- Use or build a fire pit.
- Do NOT build a fire larger than necessary.
- Remember to have someone attend to the fire at all times. Unattended fires are some of the most common causes of human related wildfires.
- Keep a shovel and water bucket near the fire at all times. A fire extinguisher is also recommended.
- If you must leave the fire pit and there is no one to supervise it, make sure that all embers, coal, and flames have been extinguished. You can do this by practicing the down, stir, and feel method of fire extinguishing. Basically, throw water on the fire, using a shovel, stir around the pit to wet any remaining embers and ash. Turn wood and coals over and also wet them, and finally, use some dirt to smother anything that remains. To verify that everything has been cooled completely, you can use the back of your hand to feel for heat. If you feel heat coming from the pile of coals and ash, or the rocks if you used rocks to enclose the fire, then there is still the potential for a fire, so you can keep wetting the area until it is completely cool.

CONSEQUENCES OF STARTING A WILDFIRE

Many people have witnessed firsthand the devastation a wildfire can cause. Those affected by a tragedy like this may be left wondering if anyone is held accountable. What are the consequences of starting a wildfire, either accidentally or intentionally? Often, it will depend on your local, county, state, and federal laws, as well as intent. Punishments can range from fines, to probation, to serving time in jail or even prison. Whether the fire was set intentionally or not, individuals may also be held responsible for the cost of fighting the fires, in addition for the cost of damages to any property that was burned.

CONCLUSION

While natural occurring wildfires can be good for the environment, human caused wildfires can have more affect on property and even lead to the loss of human life. Keep in mind that human caused wildfires are easily preventable and that you have a personal responsibility to assure that fires you start don't get out of control. Remember, it's up to you to prevent wildfires.
