

Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors
By Shauna Krause, President, Capitol Services, Inc.

A 'digital' question gets us rolling! I will 'blast' through another while under pressure to clean up some confusion about power washing before wrapping up 'history' for our last contractor...

Q: I have a question regarding the fingerprinting process. If I am understanding correctly, because I am an out of state resident, I need to take the fingerprint card to a police or sheriff's office here in Alabama, complete it and mail it in. It sounds like the LiveScan service is for CA residents only. Is this correct?

A: Live scan services are not for California residents only, however live scan fingerprints for the CSLB can only be done in California in order for them to be sent electronically. If you do the fingerprints outside of California, it can add weeks, and sometimes months, to the process.

Q: Our company does pressure washing (or power washing). One of my clients recently requested to have our Contractor's license number in order to complete their project. We have been doing pressure washing for over eight years without a Contractor's license. We don't use any chemicals or detergents or soaps or any abrasive materials that are typically used in water blasting. Our equipment setup uses water at 3,500 PSI and 4.7 GPM. It was my understanding that it was considered water "blasting" when it reached at least 10,000 PSI and 8 GPM, in which case a contractor's license would be necessary. Can you clarify?

A: If the cost of the pressure washing/blasting project is over $500, including labor and materials, a Contractor's License will be required. The "C-61""D38" (Sand and Water Blasting) classification would be the license you would need to obtain.

Q: I have had a Responsible Managing Employee (RME) on my license since its inception. He left the company in March of last year (2018). I applied to add myself as the Qualifier shortly after he resigned, and I requested a 90-day extension, which was granted. I had several personal matters come up during the process, including a death in the family, and I kept having to re-schedule my exams. I had until September to replace the RME, but the process was actually completed in early August. If you look at my license online, it shows the former RME Disassociated on March 14th and then I became the Responsible Managing Officer (RMO) on August 8th. One of my current clients has an attorney who is looking at my license and stating that it was suspended from June 14th thru August 7th due to not having a Qualifier. I understand that would make sense- if I wasn't granted the 90-day extension. How do I prove that my license has been in good standing all along?

A: The only way to show proof of that would be to order a Certified License History from the CSLB which will give you the history of any suspensions, expirations, etc. We can order the documents for you so please contact us if you'd like our assistance.

Corporate Formalities: A Necessary Part of Business

Many benefits exist in choosing to create a corporation or limited liability company (“LLC”) as your business entity. However, what attracts most people to these entities is the protection they afford the business owner(s) against personal liability for the business’ obligations, debts, and other liabilities. Whatever reason prompts your decision to form a corporation or LLC, if you are like many smaller businesses, once the formation process is over its back to business as usual.

However, in order to keep the protection against personal liability associated with a corporation or LLC, the business must engage in, what are known as corporate formalities. Corporate formalities are formal actions that must be taken by a corporation or LLC in order to maintain the benefits associated with that business entity. These corporate formalities may be required under California law, by the bylaws, and/or by the operating agreement of your business.

When your business is formed as a corporation, many of the corporate formalities exist as part of California’s Corporations Code (“CCC”). These formalities include: (1) holding annual meetings (CCC § 600); (2) regularly electing directors (CCC § 301); (3) keeping meeting minutes (CCC § 1500); and (4) maintaining accurate corporate records (CCC § 1500). While these are only a few of the corporate formalities existing for corporations in the State of California, these formalities are often overlooked or put off by smaller businesses because they are either unknown to the business or are intended to be complied with later, as the actual running of the business takes priority.

If you select an LLC as the entity type for your business, the corporate formalities are less stringent than those of a corporation, and less likely to be required by California law. For example, California law does not require an LLC to hold an annual meeting, which lessens or eliminates the need to keep meeting minutes, and an LLC need not have a board of directors. California law does require that an LLC maintain accurate records, however. (CCC § 17701.13).

It is also important to pay attention to the corporation’s obligations listed in the bylaws, or the LLC’s obligations listed in the operating agreement, as both of these documents may provide additional corporate formalities for the business.

Personal Liability

Generally, the shareholders, officers, and directors of a corporation cannot be held personally liable for corporate debts, obligations, and other liabilities since the corporation is its own separate entity. However, courts may disregard the separate corporate entity of a business and attach personal liability in certain circumstances; an act known as piercing the corporate veil. In determining whether or not it is appropriate to pierce the corporate veil, one of the factors courts consider is adherence to corporate formalities. (See Tomaselli v. Transamerica Ins. Co (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 1269; Auer v. Frank (1964) 227 Cal.App.2d 396; Wheeler v. Superior Mortg. Co. (1961) 196 Cal.App.2d 822.) Where corporate formalities are disregarded, this factor tends to weigh in support of a personal liability finding.

As with corporations, California law also provides personal liability protections to members of an LLC due to the LLC’s separate entity status. (CCC § 1773.04). And while this same statute allows the corporate veil of an LLC to be pierced, it expressly provides that the failure to hold meetings of the members, or observe corporate formalities associated with said meetings shall not be a factor tending to establish personal liability. This acknowledges the fact that annual meetings are not statutorily required. However, courts are not prevented from considering the disregard of corporate formalities, related to holding member meetings or otherwise, where the LLC's operating agreement provides for such formalities.

Although it may not guarantee protection against personal liability where a plaintiff personally names an owner, officer, director, or manager of a corporation or an LLC, by complying with the statutory, bylaw, and/or operating agreement corporate formalities you may help tip a court's assessment in your favor.

The Corporate Memory

Protection against personal liability aside, ensuring that complete and accurate corporate records and meeting minutes are maintained also serves as a means of preserving the corporate "memory." (Hurwitz v. Gross (1907) 5 Cal.App.614, 621.) The corporate "memory" may be used as evidence in the event the business brings or defends against a lawsuit. (Union Trust Co. of San Francisco v. Dickinson (1916) 30 Cal.App. 91, 99.) By complying with your business' corporate formalities, not only are you taking an active role in maintaining your business' separate legal status, but you are producing the corporate record which can be used should a lawsuit arise between your business and an outside plaintiff, or your business and an inside plaintiff.

Although many of the corporate formalities associated with running a corporation and LLC may seem tedious and insignificant, it is necessary to observe them. But keep in mind that this observation need not be overly formal and should not be intimidating.

If your business is a corporation, or your LLC's operating agreement requires an annual meeting, make sure that the meeting is timely held. However, don't feel as though this meeting needs to be a big production. Depending on your business' culture, the annual meeting may be as formal or informal an affair as desired. The important part is to provide proper notice for the meeting, actually hold the meeting, and keep meeting minutes (this is also true for any special meetings held). While meeting minutes are intended to be a concise and accurate statement of what occurred at the meeting, it is generally recommended that you include the date, time and location of the meeting; the purpose of the meeting; the person(s) present and/or absent; if notice was provided or waived; and what motions, actions, or resolutions took place at the meeting.

By paying attention to your business' corporate formalities now, you are taking a proactive step toward maintaining the personal liability protection you likely sought in choosing to form a corporation or an LLC.

Recording a Mechanic's Lien? Hold Your Horses!

By: Sharice B. Marootian
Abdulaziz, Grossbart & Rudman

We have all heard of mechanic's liens being invalid when they are recorded after the statutory deadline (generally, 90 days from completion of the work, with certain exceptions). But did you know that your mechanic's lien can also be deemed invalid if it recorded too early?

That was exactly the outcome in a recent California Court of Appeal case entitled Precision Framing Systems, Inc. v. Henry Luzuriaga. In this case, Henry and Deborah Luzuriaga undertook to construct a veterinary hospital. They hired a general contractor and architect. The general contractor then hired Precision Framing Systems, Inc. ("Precision") as the framing subcontractor. Precision contracted with Inland Empire Truss, Inc. ("Inland") for design and fabrication of the trusses. Although Inland contracted solely with Precision and invoiced Precision, it was paid directly by the construction lender.

The chronology of events is important in this case. Therefore, I will bullet point them:

- o July 24, 2013: Precision started work on framing
- o July 29, 2013: Inland delivered the trusses
- o August 2, 2013: Precision began installing the trusses
- o August 7, 2013: City issued a correction notice relating to the trusses
- o August 14, 2013: Precision notified Inland that the trusses were defective
- o Later in August 2013: Inland carried out repairs to the trusses
- o December 9, 2013: City issued a second correction notice relating to the trusses
- o December 23, 2013: General contractor and Precision's superintendent walked the project

The general contractor found that Precision's work was complete and fully in compliance with the plans and specifications. At that point, according to the general contractor, Precision had completed its scope of work. The city approved Precision's framing work. However, the owner refused to pay Precision and later locked out all contractors.

- o January 2, 2014: Precision recorded its mechanic's lien claim for $53,268.16
- o Between January 20 – 29, 2014: Precision first became aware of the correction notices, although Precision had communicated with Inland in January 2014 regarding repairs Inland would be performing
- o January 29, 2014: Owner took the position that Precision's mechanic's lien was premature because it had not yet completed its scope of work and because the correction notices were still outstanding. She even confirmed with Precision that it intended "on completing any work pursuant to [their] contract"
- o On February 12 or 13, 2014: Inland carried out repairs which took two or three hours

When Precision filed suit to foreclose on the mechanic's lien, the owner filed a cross-complaint. The court granted summary judgment against Precision ruling that the mechanic's lien claim was filed prematurely. In other words, it was filed before Precision ceased to provide work. Precision appealed the decision claiming (1) that the word "cease" within the meaning of the statute can be a gradual process, (2) the repair was not part of Precision's work, (3) Precision had completed all of its work before it recorded the mechanic's lien, and (4) the repairs were done by Inland. The Court of Appeal affirmed the trial court ruling and held that Precision had not yet ceased work with it recorded its mechanic's lien.

Although the mechanic's lien is a creditors' remedy stemming from the California constitution, a claimant must observe and comply with the statutory provisions in order to enforce the lien. The important statute, Civil Code Section 8414, provides:

"A claimant other than a direct contractor may not enforce a lien unless the claimant records a claim of lien within the following times:

- (a) After the claimant ceases to provide work.
- (b) Before the earlier of the following times:
 - 1. Ninety days after completion of the work of improvement.
 - 2. Thirty days after the owner records a notice of completion or cessation."

If filed prematurely, a mechanic's lien is void and cannot be enforced. The court defines the word "cease" as meaning "to end." If it is in the process of ending, it can end gradually (ceasing), but it has not ceased for purposes of the statute. The court held that the statutory definition of "work of improvement" includes both construction and repairs. Therefore, it had to analyze whether the repairs performed by Inland were part of the "scheme of improvement as a whole." If they were, then the time to file a mechanic's lien runs from repairs done after other work is complete.

Precision's contract stated that the contract price was "for labor, lumber, trusses, and hardware necessary to complete the...project." Since the contract called for Precision to supply the trusses necessary to complete the project, not merely trusses in conformity with the plans, the project could not be completed as long as the notices of correction were outstanding. Further, Inland was deemed Precision's subcontractor, even though it was paid direct by the lender. Therefore, the repair of the trusses was within Precision's scope of work, and until these repairs were complete, Precision had not "cease[d] to provide work."

Finally, although Precision claims it did not know of correction notices when it recorded the lien, the claimant's subjective knowledge as to whether it has ceased to provide work is not relevant. In fact, Precision could have recorded its mechanic's lien claim again after the repairs were performed and avoided this harsh outcome!

CONSTRUCTION BOOTCAMP

Construction Fundamentals 3 Classes, 9 Weeks to Completion

Jump start a career in the building trades with the three classes in the Construction Bootcamp at the Sierra College - Nevada County Campus. In just nine weeks, students will learn about the building industry and its various trades, occupational safety, proper and safe hand and power tool operation, as well as material handling and construction techniques. Upon completion, students will be eligible to attend a meet and greet with construction industry professionals to network and explore career opportunities.

CET 0805 Introduction to Safety for the Building Trade

1/10-1/18, Friday & Saturday ONLY, 9-3:50pm

Provides an introduction to safety and health hazards that workers may encounter on construction sites, including employee and employer rights and responsibilities. Upon successful completion, 10-hour OSHA card issued by instructor. (pass/no pass grading) (noncredit)

CET 0806 Introduction to Building Trades & Tools

1/31-2/22, Friday & Saturday ONLY, 9-5pm

Prerequisite: Completion of CET 0805 with grade of "Pass"

Provides an overview of the local/regional building trade industry. Introduces students to the proper and safe operation of hand and power tools used in construction. (pass/no pass grading) (noncredit)

CET 0807 Basic Material Handling & Building

2/28-3/21, Friday & Saturday ONLY, 9-3:50pm

Prerequisite: Completion of CET 0806 with grade of "Pass"

Provides an overview of building materials, construction techniques, and related building codes. Introduces students to basic trades including plumbing, electrical, and HVAC. (pass/no pass grading) (noncredit)

DEMOLITION: DEBRIS REMOVAL

INTRODUCTION

No matter what type of demolition (interior, selective, or total) you are doing, there is going to be debris as a result of the job. Debris needs to be cleaned up properly because it is a hazard to employees and the public. Following the safe work practices provided in this lesson will help ensure employee safety.

HAZARDS

Employees could potentially be exposed to several hazards while prepping debris for removal or during the removal process, including:

- Getting crushed
- Crushed extremities
- Scrapes or cuts
- Splinters
- Tripping
- Silica

PERSONAL PROTECTIVE EQUIPMENT (PPE)

Employees should wear the following personal protective equipment:

- Hard hat
- Steel toe shoes
- Gloves (leather should be worn when working with metal or items with a sharp edge)
- Safety glasses (optional or when required by employer)
- Reflective vest or jacket (when required by employer)
- Hearing protection (when required by employer or environment)

SAFE WORK PRACTICES

- Employees should do the following when removing debris from the upper levels of a structure:
 - o Employees should post hazard warning signs for falling material on each level of the structure when dropping debris through holes in the floor when no chute is present.
 - o Ensure that barricades no less than 42 inches high and 6 feet back from the projected edge of the debris opening are placed around the area in which the debris is going to fall.
 - o A chute (a slide that is enclosed on all sides) should be utilized when debris is being dropped 20 feet from the exterior of the structure.
 - o 4-inch-wide by 6-inch-high toeboards or bumpers should be used when using wheel barrows or other mechanical equipment to dump debris down the chute.
 - o Ensure that the chute has a gate that can be closed when the chute is not being used.
 - o A guardrail that is 42 inches high should be provided when debris is being dumped manually into the chute.
 - o Do NOT walk under or through the debris falling zone.
 - o Ensure that no employee removes debris from the fall zone until all debris-handling from the above floor has stopped.
- The work area should be clean of all scrap lumber, waste material, and rubbish as the work progresses.
- Work gloves that are made of leather should be used when picking up debris that may have sharp edges.
- Do NOT exceed your body's limit when picking up debris.
- Proper ergonomics should be used when lifting heavy pieces of debris.
- If an employee is going to be working around excavators and vehicles during debris removal, they should inform the drivers and operators that they are going to be working in the area.
- Do NOT stand under a load.
- The driver of the truck being loaded should inform the operator of the road conditions so loads can be adjusted for safe driving.
- If there is the potential of an operator not being able to see the vehicle, there should be one person assigned to signal to the operator.
- All loads should be balanced for the vehicle's weight limit.
- Do NOT go over the weight limit of the truck.
- Do NOT have debris sticking out of the truck.

CONCLUSION

No matter the method, removing debris can be a dangerous job on a demolition site. Unlike construction debris, where the size of debris can be controlled, the debris on a demolition site will vary in size and shape. Employees can minimize the risk of debris removal when they follow safe work practices.
