

Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors
By Shauna Krause, President, Capitol Services, Inc.

Not to laugh, every question has an answer that offers benefit in asking. Especially when it comes to contracting rules and regulation. Yes, working out of your licensed trade isn't too late it's better if you never. Another contractor makes a 'judgement' call but should have asked for expert help sooner rather than later...

Q: This seems like a really silly question, but my Boss wanted me to confirm with you. Does the RME need to be the one that takes the test for the license?

A: Yes, your RME/RMO is the one who must document the appropriate experience and take the required exam(s).

Q: I currently have a "C-61"/"D-35" (Pool and Spa Maintenance) Contractor's License. Many of my customers who I have monthly contracts with frequently have me replace or install new pumps, lights, motors, and even request solar systems for their pools. As I'm sure you are aware, all of these installations and repairs have electrical components involved. I know my license doesn't allow for me to install solar systems, however over the years of referring that out to properly licensed contractors and working alongside them, I learned the process and started doing solar systems and other electrical work (such as panel boxes) related to pools and spas when requested. I know that much of the work I do is not permitted with my existing classification. I want to add the "C-10" classification to my license so I don't get in trouble with the CSLB for working out of scope. I think I know the answer to this, but am I the one who needs to take the trade exam, or can I have one of employees take the exam and use my experience to back him up?

A: Two similar questions this week with two similar answers! The person Qualifying the "C-10" classification must both document the required experience and be the one to take and pass the required exam(s). You already know working out of trade is not recommended for so many reasons!

Q: I have a pending application to replace the Qualifier on our license and it's been approved, but due to COVID my test date was pushed out until mid-September. The whole point of the process we are trying to complete is to remove the current Qualifier because he has a "pending" complaint on another license he is associated with and we don't want it to affect our license. We marked the box on the application to not have him Disassociated from our Company license until I've been added, but due to the delay in testing, we are worried the complaint may become an issue before I'm officially added to the license. Would it be quicker to hire someone who is already licensed and qualified (as an RME) to replace him until I can complete the examination process?

A: It would certainly be quicker to utilize someone who is already qualified because there would be no testing requirement so there wouldn't be a delay in processing the application. However, that being said, the company can only have one application in process at a time, so you would need to withdraw your pending application, which of course would cancel your exam date. Also, keep in mind that if you hire someone to act as your RME, he/she would be required to Inactivate or Disassociate from their current license in order to Qualify your company license. An RME is only permitted to on one Active license at a time. You can always submit a new application to replace the RME in the future.

While knowledge is power, knowing where to go for the answers is half the battle. DEFENSIVE DRIVING PRACTICES

INTRODUCTION

Every driver has heard of defensive driving. Defensive driving is important because drivers have to factor in other drivers, weather conditions, and other hazards to avoid accidents. Employees who drive may not be able to control the driving behaviors of other people on the road; however, they can control their own actions. By following some common defensive driving practices, employees who drive can help protect themselves and others while out on the road.

LOOK AHEAD

Looking ahead is important for defensive driving because it allows the driver to be aware of what is ahead of them. Many drivers might think that looking ahead means just looking at the vehicle in front of them, but that is not the case. Looking ahead includes:

- Glancing at your intended lane of travel continuously while driving.
- Looking at the spot where your vehicle will be in 15 seconds or longer. In inclement weather, drivers should add more seconds on to their initial 15-20 seconds depending on road conditions.
- Watching the vehicle not only in front of you, but the vehicles that are driving in front of that vehicle. The vehicles that are further ahead will impact how the drivers behind them will act.
- Looking at traffic that are in the other lanes that are ahead of you.

BE AWARE OF YOUR SURROUNDINGS

Whether a driver is on a country road or in the middle of big city traffic, they should always be aware of their surroundings. It only takes a few seconds for things to change. Being aware of your surroundings includes:

- Locating motorcycles or bicycles that may be to the side, in front of, or behind your vehicle. Locating these riders is important because they have an easier time moving around traffic than other vehicles. Ensuring that you give all motorcycles and bicycles sufficient space to avoid accidental collision.
- Identifying the location of pedestrians. Watching pedestrians is important because they may have not seen your vehicle when crossing a street or jogging on the side of the road.
- Noting and preparing for changes in the speed limit.
- Accounting for the stopping time and loads of other drivers. Put some extra distance between your vehicle and those vehicles that have trailers or other items, such as boats, attached to the rear. These items may come loose and detach during travel.

DEFENSIVE DRIVING PRACTICES

SCANNING THE AREA AROUND YOUR VEHICLE

Driving is not like other activities where you can allow your eyes to stare at the same point for a long amount of time. Drivers should move their eyes around every few seconds to help them maintain focus on all areas around them and avoid traps such as falling asleep or becoming complacent due to the scenery. Scanning the area includes:

- Continuously looking to the front, rear, and sides of your vehicle.
- Checking your mirrors every few seconds. Your mirrors play an important part of informing you of where other vehicles and pedestrians are located.
- Keeping distractions like cell phones, laptops, tablets, etc. stored during travel. Your eyes are meant to be scanning the area around your vehicle for hazards. They can't do that if you are looking at a screen.

PREPARE FOR "WHAT IF'S" AND EMERGENICES

Similar to having a prepared route for escaping a building, drivers should ensure that they prepare for a way to change or get out of lanes in case a hazard or other emergency happens. Preparing for such scenarios includes:

- Leaving a sufficient amount of space between you and other vehicles. The more amount of space between you and another vehicle, the better.
- Leaving one lane to the side of your vehicle open for swerving or exiting.
- Watching and predicting the behaviors of other drivers.
- Avoiding "herds" of vehicles.

ALERT OTHER DRIVERS TO YOUR PRESENCE

Having other drivers being alert to your presence is important because if they can see you, you can see them, and everyone avoids an accident. You can alert others to your presence by:

- Staying out of other driver's blind spots.
- Making eye contact with other drivers.
- Using your signals when changing lanes and making turns.
- Using your headlights when conditions are dark or in inclement weather.
- Ensuring that your brake lights are in working order. Other drivers cannot brake for you if they do not know that you are braking.
- Use your horn to warn others that you are backing up or to get their attention. Do NOT use your horn to express anger.

CONCLUSION

Driving is always going to be a hazardous task. Employees can help protect themselves and others from accidents by practicing defensive driving. Defensive driving is not difficult to learn, and it has long-term benefits. The defensive driving practices provided in this lesson can help protect employees both at home and on the job.
