

Capitol Connection Q&A for Contractors
By Shauna Krause, President, Capitol Services, Inc.

A question from the tall timber falls on my desk. I explain the 'stand-alone' complexity of separation for a contractor and provide some 'anxiety' relief with an update on new law eliminating 'crime'...

Q: Can forest restoration projects which includes the following work be done under a Timber Operator License only, or do they also require a Contractor's license, and if so, which license(s)? The work includes forest thinning, biomass collection, removal and/or reconstruction and restoration of old forest logging roads and bridges, and related infrastructure (drainage, soil excavation and export), winterization of roads during project (grading and application of crushed rock), stream restoration (including excavation), addition of sediment basins, installation of culverts, and installation of cofferdams and other wooden structure to divert flow.

A: A Cal Fire LTO (Licensed Timber Operator) is only appropriate for harvesting trees, but not to perform any of the other trade work described. A Contractor's License would be required, and the most appropriate classification for the work described would be an "A" General Engineering license.

Q: My Partner and I currently have a licensed Construction company. We are a commercial General Contractor. We are starting a new business focusing on residential construction. We would like to treat this business as a completely separate entity with a separate name. I am a bit unclear about how this impacts ownership. The current commercial company is owned by myself and my Partner, however the residential business will have additional owners. Is that going to be an issue?

A: Let me preface my answer by stating that I am only speaking from a Contractor's Licensing perspective with regards to ownership. Because the residential company will be a separate entity, it will require a separate license number (which you probably are already aware of). If you plan to be the Qualifier on both licenses, you will be required to own at least 20% of each company. Beyond that, the CSLB doesn't concern themselves with ownership. As long as you own at least 20% of each, the two separate entities can be "stand alone" companies with different owners.

Q: Our company obtained a Contractor's license a couple of years ago and my Boss didn't want to list himself as the Qualifier (or anywhere on the application for that matter) because he had a Misdemeanor conviction in 2015 that he suspected may have been an issue with obtaining the license. He would like to become the Qualifier, but can you give us any insight on how his criminal background may affect the approval?

A: Actually, with the start of the new fiscal year for the CSLB (July 1st), they made a significant change to the application where they no longer ask applicants if they have been convicted of a crime. Assembly Bill (AB) 2138 was signed into law in September 2018. All individuals listed on a license will still need to submit fingerprints and a criminal background will be conducted, and each case will still be evaluated, but the conviction question has been removed from the application. And FYI, CSLB staff may reach out to applicants for further information regarding their criminal background if needed.

While knowledge is power, knowing where to go for the answers is half the battle. CLEANING AND DISINFECTION SAFETY

INTRODUCTION

Hotels, motels, offices, and other places people work and gather can be easy places for the spread of germs, viruses, and bacteria. To help minimize the chances of both employees and guests contracting colds and flus or other illnesses, effective cleaning and disinfecting procedures should be put in place and improper use of chemicals could potentially cause harm. In this lesson, we will go over the differences between cleaning and disinfecting, the hazards, personal protective equipment, and proper cleaning and disinfecting techniques.

THE DIFFERENCES BETWEEN CLEANING AND DISINFECTING

While many people will use the terms cleaning and disinfecting interchangeably, the truth is these terms have very different meanings. Cleaning is the removal of germs, dirt, and impurities from surfaces or objects. This is achieved by a person using a soap or detergent and water to physically scrub them from surfaces. This process, depending on the agent used, does not necessarily kill all germs, it just minimizes the risk of spreading infection and lowers the overall number of germs.

Disinfecting, on the other hand, kills germs. This is accomplished by a person using either one or more chemicals to kill the germs that are living on objects and surfaces. Disinfecting a surface after it has been cleaned can help further minimize the risk of spreading infection.

HAZARDS AND PERSONAL PROTECTIVE EQUIPMENT (PPE)

One of the most hazardous things that can happen with chemicals is mixing different chemicals together. Mixing one or more different chemicals together can result in the creation of dangerous gases such as chlorine, nitrogen trichloride, and hydrazine. These gases can cause respiratory irritation and damage, and in some serious cases loss of consciousness or death.

In addition, improper use of detergents or chemicals or improper room ventilation could potentially expose you to skin, eye, or respiratory irritation or damage, and poisoning from accidental ingestion.

Please note that hazards will differ between products and if you have any questions about any of the products you are using, please read the manufacturer-provided safety data sheets, also known as SDS. The SDS will give specifics on the hazards associated with use and personal protective equipment that should be worn, in addition to any first aid steps that can be taken to help someone should they have an adverse reaction.

CLEANING AND DISINFECTION SAFETY

When working with chemicals and detergents, you may need to wear safety glasses or goggles, rubber or nitrile gloves, an apron or other piece of protective clothing, and closed-toed shoes. You should read the manufacturer-provided safety data sheet to see what specific personal protective equipment that you'll need for that product. All PPE should be inspected for damage, with damaged items being reported to your supervisor.

PROPER CLEANING AND DISINFECTING TECHNIQUES

After the appropriate PPE has been chosen, you can start selecting the appropriate detergent or chemical for the job. Some detergents and chemicals come ready to use, while others require mixing to the proper concentrations prior to use. If you are working with a chemical or detergent that requires mixing, you should mix it in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions and read all labels for proper mixture proportions.

For proper disinfecting, the Center for Disease Control (CDC) recommends that you use:

- A diluted household bleach solution;
- Alcohol solutions with at least 70% alcohol; or
- An EPA-registered disinfectant (such as aerosol disinfectants).

Note: That items listed above should only be used after a surface has been cleaned.

You should follow your company's cleaning and disinfecting policies and procedures.

Once the proper concentration has been reached or you have chosen an appropriate ready to use product, you can start your task.

Whether you are at a hotel, office, home, or other place of work, it is recommended that the following surfaces be cleaned and disinfected frequently:

- Doorknobs and handles;
- Lamps;
- Remotes;
- Keyboards and computer mice;
- All bathroom surfaces;
- Desks; and
- Any other frequently touched surface in the room or area.

Again, know that all detergents and chemicals should be used in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions. In order to be effective, most disinfectant products require that the surface look wet and be allowed to air dry.

An important question to ask when you're done is, "Where should I put the cleaning solution?" When you are not using a detergent or chemical, it should either be properly stored or discarded. For instance, bleach solutions are only effective for about 24 hours, so such solutions should either be made in small amounts or discarded at the end of the day, unless otherwise specified by the manufacturer instructions. Detergents or chemicals that have been placed in bottles different than the manufacturers should be appropriately labeled.

Additionally, if you are cleaning or disinfecting linens, clothing, or other items that may be laundered, it is advised that laundry not be shaken. Shaking laundry can disperse viruses through the air. Items should be washed in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions and washed on the warmest appropriate setting for the item and then be allowed to dry completely before they are stored or placed back in their appropriate locations.

As it relates to PPE and touching surfaces, you should remove gloves after cleaning a room or after cleaning areas that were occupied by ill persons, especially during cold, flu, and other illness outbreaks. Hands should be washed immediately after gloves have been removed and you should wash your hands for 20 seconds using soap and water. If soap or water is not available, it is recommended that you use a hand sanitizer that contains 60%-95% alcohol. Please realize that sanitizer should only be used as a replacement to soap and water when there is no visible dirt on the hands. Hands with dirt on them should always be washed with soap and water.

CONCLUSION

In summary, remember that whether you are working at a hotel, community hall, or your own home, cleaning and disinfecting can play a huge part in minimizing your chances of contracting disease from germs, viruses, and bacteria. Improper use of detergents and chemicals could potentially cause harm to you or someone else, so such items should be used in the proper concentrations and in accordance with the manufacturer's instructions. When not in use, these solutions or products should either be properly stored or discarded and if you ever have any questions about your company's cleaning and disinfecting policies and procedures, you should speak with your supervisor.
